

LocalHarvest

real food, real farmers, real community

What Our Members are Saying...

I want to say that your site is wonderful. I have received much business from it. Local people who did not know I was here have found me through the LocalHarvest site and I have myself made contact with numerous farms and growers through it.

Many thanks again...this worked out great for me ... I will definitely do it again next year. I sold out my [CSA] shares this year, a first! Just picked up a new greenhouse and am planning on major expansion in the future.

Keep up your great work. I should tell you how many inquiries I've gotten from your web site for my CSA and my farm. You have been a great resource for us and I am always grateful!

Join us! Since 1999, over 14,000 farms and farmers markets have joined LocalHarvest.org, the online directory of locally marketed, sustainably grown food. Many are now selling their products on-line through our store as well.

LocalHarvest started with the premise that if people could easily find sources of locally grown food, they would recognize its many values and buy it. The site's founders created LocalHarvest as a way to support family farmers, increase the variety of foods available in the marketplace, and revitalize local communities.

Every day, at least 15,000 people visit LocalHarvest.

LocalHarvest is arguably the best place on the Internet to publicize your farm. Over 3 million people visited our site last year, and traffic continues to rise. Plus, it's free!

When you join LocalHarvest, you create a "listing" for your farm — essentially your own web page within the LocalHarvest site. You can upload a photo of your farm, create a link to your farm's own web site, list the products that you sell, and publicize on-farm events. It's easy and, as thousands of farmers across the country are finding, it's good for business.

To create your listing, go to www.localharvest.org and click on "New Members Sign Up Here" at the top of the page. If you have questions, contact webmaster@LocalHarvest.org.
